Tiki Receives Best of Open Source Software Applications Award

Rick - 01 Sep 2010 23:08 GMT-0000

Tiki Wiki CMS Groupware has been awarded a 2010 Bossie award (Best of Open Source Software) by InfoWorld, in the Applications category. InfoWorld's Best of Open Source Software Awards (aka the Bossies) is chosen annually by Test Center editors and reviewers, and recognize the best open source software for business users.

The editors called Tiki "a powerful, integrated, Web-based application" that can "build and maintain websites, wikis, groupware, CMSes, forums, blogs, and bug trackers, as well as make them multilingual."

(Please note that the original slideshow linked from the image above is not available anymore. See this WebArchive link instead.)

The review continues, citing Tiki's "fine-grained role-based privilege system" as a differentiating factor against classic wiki models, such as MediaWiki. Read the full article on InfoWorld.com.

Alternatively you can read this article in German language (including the original slide show).

And don't forget to nominate Tiki for the Packt 2010 Open Source Awards!