At this difficult time with the coronavirus pandemic spread around the world and people everywhere doing their best to cope with it and recover, we want to express our solidarity with everyone responding to the problem, and we assure you that we will try to do our part by continuing to make Tiki Wiki CMS Groupware available as a free tool for online collaboration and data presentation, which may be especially useful in this time of social distancing.

Tiki is an Open Source software project developed and maintained by individuals working remotely from many places around the world. With project contributors taking appropriate precautions in their locations, no disruption of our normal processes is expected, and the Tiki 21.1 LTS (Long-Term Support) release and, tentatively, the Tiki 20.3 and 18.6 LTS releases are coming soon.

Now with business as usual on hold, we hope organizations and individuals looking for online collaboration software will consider Tiki Wiki CMS Groupware, because this is precisely what Tiki was designed for.

For those wanting to try Tiki, please see the demo links. For assistance, please use the community forums to post questions about installation, configuration and so on. For more difficult problems or for users with a budget, paid consultation is available, as is enterprise support.

Again, our sympathy goes out to those who have suffered losses from COVID-19, and let's all hope for this historic pandemic to be brought under control as soon as possible.
